[redacted] Captain John Bruce, Chief, Legislative Affairs, U.S. Coast Guard, called for an appointment to discuss U.S. policy and procedures in handling defectors. He explained that his attempt to get this information from State Department had proven unsatisfactory as he had been referred back to a Captain Dahlgren (phonetic) in the Coast Guard. His interest stems from an up-coming visit by the Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy and the need to institute a course there on the handling of defectors (international law and foreign policy implications). After a discussion with [redacted] who also called Captain Dahlgren's office, I advised Captain Bruce that on the basis of information available to me, Captain Dahlgren should be a knowledgeable source for the type of information needed. Captain Bruce didn't seem to be optimistic about the outcome but said he would call Dahlgren.
